RESEARCH AND TEACHING INTERESTS

American Politics: legislative politics, public opinion, voting behavior, and electoral politics.

Methodology: time series, duration analysis, and limited dependent variables.

Special Teaching Notes:

- 1) Team taught a Committee on Institutional Cooperation (CIC) course on dynamic modeling with John Freeman (University of Minnesota) in 1996 and 2002, and on event history modeling in 2000. Students at Ohio State University, University of Minnesota, University of Wisconsin - Madison, and the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign took the course. The 1996 time series course was the first course taught by interactive, multi-point video. (See the 1994-95 CIC Annual Report, p. 10. See Media Applications and Development Grant below and note that the CIC provided considerable start up funds for the technology costs).
- 2) Team taught a course on duration analysis at the annual meeting of the Political Science Association in 1998, Boston. It is one of the first two courses in the Political Methodology Video Series and available for purchase (see Political Methodology Video Web Site at http://psweb.sbs.ohio-state.edu/faculty/rtimpone/methods_videos/).
- 3) Taught a legislative politics class, "The Classroom on Capital Hill," with eight Washington, DC, special guest speakers via interactive video in 1999. The speakers included Senator Richard Lugar; Bob Biersack from the Federal Election Commission; Candy Crowley, CNN congressional correspondent; Al Quinlan from Quinlan and Associates polling firm; Anna Cabral, head of the Senate Judiciary Committee for Senator Orin Hatch; Eric Heberlig, congressional fellow with Representative Sawyer's Office, and other congressional staffers (see Impact of Interactive Video Seminars Grant below).
- 4) Taught a writing course on legislatures and interest groups completely on-line in 1999 and 2002 (see Campaigns and Elections Grant below). Participated in "Exploring the Pedagogy of Online Learning" Workshop through the grant as well.
