CURRENT RESEARCH PROJECTS

“The Development of the Congressional Community, 1790-1970.” A study of the development of informal networks among members of Congress, based on data on congressional residences and other informal linkages and analysis of the effect of these ties on congressional behavior, in voting and coalitions (with William Minozzi). (1) Data collection: acquiring and assembling unofficial and official congressional directories, by session and edition, from 1790 through 1990. Finding and preparing pages on members’ addresses from the directories for data entry; Suntec double enters addresses and names from the the materials we sent; several research assistants over a period of two years reconcile, correct, and organize the data from Suntec; preparation of relational dataset for use in statistical analysis. Completed all but pre-1811 period. (2) Assembled demographic and political data, including roll-call votes, on MC’s from 1800 to the present, from the ICPSR collection. Completed all but pre-1811 period. (3) Acquisition and digital scanning of more than sixty historical maps of Washington DC, spanning 1790 to the present; research assistants from Geography geo-reference historical maps to the current map of Washington, DC, so we can locate MC’s from different times in history to the same map and take into account physical changes in Washington. Completed. (4) Based on digital representations of historical maps of Washington and historical research, GIS research assistants started geo-coding MC’s addresses to maps of Washington DC, beginning with post-Civil War congresses, after new system of street names was adopted. Thus far assistant have completed several congresses. This phase of the project is large in scope and particularly difficult because of the changing and idiosyncratic systems of addresses and the odd, inconsistent, and vague addresses used in the pre-Civil War period. The latter range from “Mrs Smith’s Near the Post Office” or “Whitney’s on Capitol Hill,” both indefinite, to “Seven Buildings,” definite because we can locate the precise address through historical research; to Pennsylvania, corner 14th,” relatively specific in location but not in the number of the address. Geo-coding the pre-Civil War period requires a great deal of judgment and historical knowledge, which makes it hard to delegate to research assistants.

“The New Deal and the Constitution in Congress and the Court.” Studies of the constitutional conflict the New Deal provoked in the Court and Congress and the reactions of those institutions, particularly in the Court-packing fight of 1937, based on data on public opinion, head counts of US senators likely votes on legislation, and FDR’s actions (part with Minozzi, part solo).

“Agenda-Control in the Hughes and Stone Courts, 1939-1946.” Studies of the Court’s decision-making on whether to decide cases, based on individual votes, data on cases from US Supreme Court Records and Briefs, and analysis of the justices’ private papers (with Daniel Lempert).
